Sandy Administrator Wins National Award

The Chief Administrative Officer for Sandy City, Byron Jorgenson, recently was awarded “The National ICMA Award for Career Development.” The award was presented October 7, 2007 at the annual ICMA Conference in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in front of thousands of city and county managers from around the world. An article in the internationally distributed Public Management Magazine recently featured Jorgenson and his accomplishments as part of receiving this well-recognized award. The article states, “Over his 20-year tenure as chief administrative officer for Sandy, Byron may well have directly affected the careers of more current and future local government managers than anyone else in the profession. Many of the countless individuals whom he has supervised, worked with, or mentored have become city managers themselves, because the attributes they developed under his guidance are highly coveted by other organizations.”

In fact, individuals Jorgenson has supervised and mentored have gone on to fulfill top leadership roles in 27 different local governments in eight different states. The following quotes are also taken from the article which highlights him as an award recipient.

“Even while managing Sandy’s large and complex organization and providing guidance to the budding city managers within it, Mr. Jorgenson has made himself available to those working for other organizations.”

A large part of Mr. Jorgenson’s leadership strength comes from his high standards of personal ethics and integrity, which he exemplifies himself and demands in those around him. Throughout his many years of service, Byron Jorgenson has remained committed to improving local government and, particularly, those who manage communities. The combination of leadership, management, and integrity that he displays sets the tone for future managers in a profession where each quality is absolutely essential.”

Congratulations to Byron Jorgenson, Chief Administrative Officer for Sandy.
